SPECIFIC DISCLAIMER

Canyoning Activity

Canyoning is a water sport which consists in the descent into small streams with narrow canyons. The environment where it takes place is by its very nature inhospitable and dangerous: a canyoning itinerary runs through, inside the canyons deeply carved out in the rock, characterised usually by steep terrain. The obstacles are therefore made up of waterfalls, rock jumps, slides, flooded couloirs, little lakes. It is impossible to turn back, and the exit from the canyon is only at the end of the route unless there is an alternative way out.

The canyoning activities proposed by Mountainlive last about half a day, time in the water varying on average from one hour and a half to about two hours, we return to the departure point of the canyon on foot by paths with only a modest height gain. The risks involved are typical of water sports, combined with those of an inhospitable and dangerous climate (hypothermia and frostbite, drowning, falling from a height, slipping, loss of balance etc ...).
